

23 Years old, Kindergarden Teacher

01 With children, joking around works quite well (reverse psychology). Motivator Offer. Collecting tokens works well with small children. Children don't break the rules if they like the app. When they get bored, they find something to do and start breaking the rules.

02 Children are motivated by praise (mascots in the app, stickers, stars), children are motivated by other children (community. If Anna does that, I want to do that too).

03 Pedophiles or fake accounts to get in contact with children. Too attached to this app. Stop bullying. Enlighten them beforehand (use and dangers), set rules, trust that they can use it. Children blocker (things they must not see). Observe the child's stage of development (not by age).

04 Proper guidelines, "The child sees this content, the child does not see this content", transparency, (Children: Exciting)

05 App is better because there is a certain framework. Website has the danger to go outside of it. Children understand the term app better and have more experience with it. App is easier to have protection. App is more up-to-date.

06 App is easier to navigate. They have experience. (Too long waiting times are bad, loading icon is important. Otherwise they press it too often).

07 No chat function for small children. Show possible participations through pictures. Registration for events. (Parents must be present at registration).

08 No, she does not need it for her future children. Doesn't want to take away space from the other children. Doesn't think it is a bad idea to support children from socially disadvantaged families.

09 Images, text-to-speech for reading aloud, voice control, speech-to-text for self-writing.

10 Yes, to share. For technique from 6 of age at the earliest. Mature discussions are very much appreciated from child to child. Partly already from 4 years of age.

11 More from parents from good households, less from parents from Hasnbergl (lower classes district in Munich).
